

Pacing W the
PORT WORLD
with CHARLES J. BRILL

Future of Twin Hills

BOBBY CRUICKSHANK is not the only one who has been disappointed at failure of Twin Hills to become an organized course before now.

It is no secret that Perry Maxwell, builder of the course, has found it to be more or less of a white elephant on his hands.

Hope of being able to organize a new golf club in Oklahoma City practically has been abandoned.

Two possible dispositions of this fine course now are being discussed.

Keefe Carter, Oklahoma City's phenomenal young golfer, has ambitions to own and operate that links on a pay-as-you-enter basis. Dorset Carter, Keefe's father, is said to be considering seriously the notion of making the boy a Christmas present of that property.

The suggestion has been made that this course may solve the problem of the Oklahoma City Golf and Country club, which, all admit, sooner or later will have to abandon its present close-in-property.