The Jeffersonville Country Club is no more. In its place is the Northside Country Club, an organization of Louisville men, open to golfers of Louisville, Jeffersonville and New Albany. The announcement of the change was made Tuesday afternoon by W. C. Lawman, Prather, Ind., owner of the property, and Guy L. Dickinson, acting head of the new organization. The Northside Country Club will take formal possession of the golf course and club house April 19, with a new professional and house manager.

Gilbert Ogilvie, who came to the United States from Scotland seven years ago, was assistant pro at the Lexington Country Club for three seasons and who for three years has been employed in the golf department of the Hillerich & Bradsby Co. Tuesday was signed as professional. Gilbert will begin duties immediately, and will have his shop ready for the opening of this season.

Hamilton Frazier of Louisville, who recently returned to the city after serving as manager of a hotel in Atlanta, Tuesday came to terms as manager of the clubhouse, it was announced. Mr. Frazier plans to complete all improvements and changes in the clubhouse, which include the addition of lockers, by opening day.

No election of officers in the Northside Club will be held until late
