

Arthur Hall, business man of this city, has learned that the late Perry Maxwell had an estate valued at something like $750,000. This is interesting to this section because Mr. Maxwell was the largest stockholder in a prominent banking institution prior to the depression of the 30's and this bank completely broke him. Maxwell went out into a new world and chose golf architecture for his profession and he amassed another fortune. Maxwell was always a man who sought places of beauty but while he sought beauty wealth came to him.
