

TULSA TO HAVE FINE
NEW COUNTRY CLUB

TULSA, Aug. 13.—(AP)—The swimming pool, skeet range and stables of Tulsa's new country club, Southern Hills, which members say will be one of the finest in the southwest when completed, have been put into use.

Work on the club house, to cost $150,000, will be started within a month, Harry A. Campbell, club secretary, said. The golf course, for which $100,000 has been set aside, already is under construction. The course laid out by Perry Maxwell, widely known golf course designer, will have sodded Bermuda fairways and some of them were given first soaking by the elaborate watering system last week.

The swimming pool, built in a T-shape, has a straightaway of 82 feet, six inches, meeting the Olympic swimming race requirements with space for seven lanes.

Campbell said that the entire plant, when completed, will cost around $300,000.
