The course at the Oklahoma City Golf and Country club is undergoing a face-lifting job in preparation for the 1953 National Amateur tournament. Among is the rebuilding of four greens, designed by the noted golf architect, Perry Maxwell is shown in the upper left photo with Harvey Allen, who is sprinkling commercial fertilizer on the new ninth green. Right, your well-known Country club golfers, left to right, Glen Norville sr., Clarence Wendt, John B. Ogden and R. J. Duffner, pause a moment in the new, yawning trap bordering the eighth green. In the lower photo greens superintendent Bob Irvine, left, and club pro Harrell Butler look over the 15th green, which is being rebuilt. All the work will be completed this winter; the greens will be ready for play sometime early next summer.
