

TRIBUTE PAID PERRY MAXWELL

When Adversity Came He Put His Shoulder to Wheel and Won Out.

My HOWE D. McCOLLOM

One of the finest personal battles I have ever seen fought was by Perry D. Maxwell. He was reared to have plenty and did not know what it meant to hub poverty. He was the largest stockholder in a former local bank and when a chash came that swept from him what he had, and left him with heavy debts hanging over his head. He did not resort to bankruptcy nor plead for pity. Thrown out into the sea of business where he had never been before, he had to either swim or give up and drown.

A stubborn fight began to keep want away and to pay the debts others, by their mismanagement, had thrust upon him. He sought work as a golf architect and was rewarded with contracts. The thing he had done for pleasure, and for his love of beauty, was his staff when adversity came. He earned more money than he ever earned in a bank. In competition with the best golf artists in the world he was given a contract to remodel the Pine Valley golf course near Philadelphia. This is one of the most exclusive golf properties in America. This is but one of the contracts he has been awarded.

He has been awarded contracts by universities and by the most exclusive golf clubs in all the country. He is demonstrating that in a line of work which has been overlooked, there are chances for unusual success.
